Battle of Fort Necessity, one of the earliest skirmishes of the French and Indian War, the North American theater of the global Seven Years' War, and the only battle George Washington ever surrendered. The fight occurred on July 3, 1754, near the site of an earlier skirmish that precipitated it (the Battle of Jumonville Glen, May 28).

West Overton was founded by Henry Overholt in the early 1800s but it was his son Abraham that took the Overholt farm from a traditional German Mennonite farm to a self-sufficient community centered around an on-site whiskey distillery. Even though Abraham Overholt made a name for his family in his own right, perhaps an even more notable event at West Overton Village was the birth of Abraham's grandson, Henry Clay Frick, one of Western Pennsylvania's greatest industrialists.
